Defined Events and Administration

safe eur separately defines an equity financing, liquidity event, dissolution event, conversion security, company capitalization, and the investor's purchase amount.

The treatment applicable at an event follows the signed SAFE's own cap, discount, family, and amendment provisions rather than a later spreadsheet recap.

Notices, assignment, governing law, counterpart execution, and amendment consent complete the operative instrument and remain effective with its economic terms.

Article I. The Parties, the Currency of Subscription and the Purpose of This Instrument

This instrument records an agreement between Helioscope Robotics, Inc., a Delaware corporation whose reporting currency is the United States dollar, and an investor resident outside the United States whose subscription was paid in euros. It provides for the future issue of equity, creates no debt, bears no interest and has no maturity date.

The subscription was paid in euros because the Investor's funds were held in euros and the Investor was unwilling to bear the cost and the timing risk of converting them before the Company had accepted the subscription. The Company accepted payment in euros on the footing that the translation of the Purchase Amount into dollars would be governed by Articles IV to VI rather than left to the practice of whichever bank happened to handle the transfer.

The instrument is on the pre-money form. Its calculations are made on that basis, and the capitalisation against which the Valuation Cap is applied is measured immediately before the Equity Financing. The Investor confirmed, through its own advisers, that it understood the difference between that basis and the basis used on the later form of the same document.

Article II. Interpretation and the Language of This Instrument

This instrument is made in the English language, and the English text governs. A translation prepared for the Investor's own use, for its regulator or for its auditors has no effect on the construction of this instrument, and the Company is not responsible for the accuracy of any such translation.

Where a term of this instrument has a technical meaning in the law of the State of Delaware and a different meaning in the law of the Investor's jurisdiction, the Delaware meaning applies. Terms such as preferred stock, common stock and liquidation preference are used in their Delaware sense and are not to be read as equivalents of the nearest local concept.

Amounts expressed in euros are identified as such wherever they appear, and amounts expressed in dollars are the Company's reporting currency. Where this instrument refers to an amount without identifying a currency, the amount is expressed in dollars.

Article III. Payment of the Purchase Amount and Its Receipt by the Company

The Investor paid the euro amount stated on the signature page to the account the Company designated, by transfer through the correspondent banking system, and the Company acknowledged receipt in writing. The Purchase Amount is the euro amount so paid, and the Company's acknowledgement records the euro amount received rather than the dollar amount its bank credited.

The Investor bore the charges of its own bank and the Company bore the charges of its own bank. Charges deducted by an intermediary bank are borne by the Investor, and if such a deduction caused the amount received to fall short of the amount stated on the signature page, the Investor made up the shortfall on the Company's notice; the Company's acknowledgement records that the full amount was ultimately received.

The Company has applied the sum received to its general working capital and has not held it in euros. The Investor has no interest in the account into which the payment was made and no claim to the sum paid, its rights being limited to the entitlements that arise on the three defined events.

Article IV. Translation of the Purchase Amount for the Purposes of Conversion

Every calculation this instrument requires is performed in dollars. The Purchase Amount is therefore translated into dollars for the purposes of the conversion calculation, and the translated amount is the amount to which the conversion particulars are applied. The euro amount on the signature page remains the definition of the Purchase Amount; the translation is a step in the calculation and does not restate the subscription.

The translation is performed once for each defined event, at the time and on the date the currency particulars of this instrument specify, using the rate published by the source those particulars identify. The Company shall not translate at a rate of its own selection, at the rate its bank applied when the subscription was received, or at an average of rates over a period.

The translated amount is rounded as the currency particulars provide. The Company shall record the untranslated euro amount, the rate applied, the source and time of the quotation and the translated amount in the officer's certificate it delivers at the event, so that the Investor and its auditors can reproduce the calculation without recourse to the Company's own records.

Article V. The Source, Time and Date of the Rate Applied

The currency particulars identify a single published source for the rate, a single time of day at which the quotation is taken, and the date on which it is taken by reference to the defined event. The parties chose a published source rather than a dealing rate so that neither party's banking relationships could affect the calculation and so that the quotation could be verified afterwards by a third party.

If the identified source does not publish a quotation for the specified date, the quotation for the most recent preceding date on which it published one is used, and the officer's certificate records the substitution and the reason for it. If the source ceases to publish altogether, Article VI applies.

The parties agreed that the rate is taken once per event and is not revisited if the market moves between the translation and the closing. The Investor bears the risk of an adverse movement in that interval and takes the benefit of a favourable one, and the Company gives no indemnity in respect of either.

Article VI. Failure of the Source, and the Resolution of a Currency Dispute

If the identified source ceases to publish a quotation, the parties shall agree a replacement source that publishes a quotation for the same currency pair on a comparable basis, and shall record the replacement in a written instrument signed by both. Until they do, the most recent quotation the identified source published is used, and the officer's certificate records that the source has failed.

If the parties cannot agree a replacement within twenty Business Days of either giving notice, either may refer the question to an independent accounting firm that neither has instructed in the preceding two years. The firm shall select a replacement source on the criteria this Article states, and its selection binds both parties. The parties share the firm's fees equally.

A dispute about the arithmetic of a translation, as distinct from the identity of the source, is resolved by the Company correcting the arithmetic; the Investor's remedy is the correction and not a claim in damages. The Company shall make a correction before the closing of the defined event where it is practicable to do so, and immediately afterwards where it is not.

Article VII. Equity Financing

On the closing of an Equity Financing the translated Purchase Amount converts into shares of preferred stock, and the Investor pays nothing further. Equity Financing means an issue of preferred stock by the Company at a fixed pre-money valuation for the principal purpose of raising capital, whether in one transaction or in a series on substantially the same terms.

The number of shares is determined as the conversion particulars provide, applying the Valuation Cap stated on the signature page. The Cap is expressed in dollars, being the Company's reporting currency, and is not translated; only the Purchase Amount is translated, and the Investor accepted that asymmetry when the instrument was negotiated.

The Investor shall execute the agreements the purchasers of the new series execute, shall deliver the investment representations those purchasers deliver, and shall provide the identification and source-of-funds documentation the Company reasonably requires from an investor resident outside the United States before shares are issued.

Article VIII. Liquidity Event and Dissolution Event

On a change of control, an initial public offering or a direct listing, the Investor is entitled to the cash amount or the shares of common stock the conversion particulars produce, applied to the translated Purchase Amount. Where cash consideration is available the Investor may elect between the two, and where it is not the Investor receives shares. An amount payable in cash is paid in dollars unless the Investor asks in writing for payment in euros, in which case the payment is translated on the same basis as Article IV provides and the Investor bears the cost of the transfer.

On a Dissolution Event the Company shall pay the Investor the translated Purchase Amount out of the assets available for distribution to stockholders, before distributing any of them to holders of common stock and after providing for creditors. If those assets are insufficient to pay every holder of an instrument of this kind, they are shared in proportion to the holders' respective amounts.

The Investor is not a creditor of the Company in respect of the Purchase Amount, whether expressed in euros or in dollars, and may not prove for it as a debt. The currency in which the subscription was paid gives the Investor no priority and no additional remedy.

Article IX. The Valuation Cap and the Pre-Money Basis

The Valuation Cap stated on the signature page fixes the highest company value at which the translated Purchase Amount converts. It is applied to the capitalisation measured immediately before the Equity Financing, as the capitalisation particulars provide, and the shares issued on the conversion of this instrument are not counted in that measurement.

There is no discount to the price paid by the purchasers of new money. The Cap is the only economic advantage this instrument confers, and if the Equity Financing is completed at or below the Cap the Investor converts on the same basis as those purchasers.

The Cap is not adjusted for a movement in the euro-dollar rate between the date of subscription and the date of conversion. The Investor's exposure to that movement is the consequence of a euro subscription into a dollar-denominated capitalisation, and the parties recorded that they had considered and accepted it.

Article X. Representations of an Investor Resident Outside the United States

The Investor represents that it was outside the United States when it received the offer of this instrument and when it executed it, that no offer was made to it in the United States, and that it did not become aware of the opportunity through any advertisement, broadcast or publication directed to persons in the United States.

The Investor represents that it is acquiring this instrument for its own account for investment and not for the account of any person in the United States, that it will not offer or sell this instrument or any security issued on its conversion to a person in the United States except in a transaction registered or exempt from registration, and that it qualifies as an accredited investor by reference to the criteria the Company's counsel identified. (17 C.F.R. § 230.501)

The Company issued this instrument in reliance on those representations and on the exemption its counsel advised was available for an offer and sale made to a person outside the United States. The Investor shall notify the Company if a representation in this Article ceases to be accurate, and shall provide such further confirmations as the Company's counsel reasonably requires before shares are issued.

Article XI. Tax: Withholding, Certification and Information

The Company shall make any deduction or withholding from a payment under this instrument that it is required by law to make, shall pay the amount deducted to the authority entitled to it, and shall give the Investor the receipt or other evidence of payment the Investor reasonably requires. A payment reduced by a required deduction discharges the Company to the extent of the gross amount.

The Company gives no gross-up. The parties considered a gross-up and did not adopt one, on the Company's position that it would not assume an obligation whose amount depends on the tax residence of a holder and on changes in law outside its control. The Investor accepted that position and undertook to provide the certifications that reduce or eliminate withholding where they are available to it.

The Investor shall provide the certification the Company reasonably requests before any payment is made, shall renew it when it expires, and shall notify the Company of a change in its circumstances that affects it. The Company shall provide the Investor with the information the Investor needs to complete its own filings, so far as that information is in the Company's possession.

Article XII. Transfer and the Limits Imposed by Local Law

The Investor may not transfer this instrument without the Company's prior written consent. The Company may withhold consent if a transfer would require it to make a filing in a jurisdiction in which it is not otherwise required to file, if the proposed transferee is a person to whom the Company is prohibited from issuing securities, or in its discretion in any other case.

The Investor shall not transfer this instrument to a person in the United States except in a transaction that is registered or exempt and as to which the Company has received counsel's confirmation. A transfer to a person outside the United States requires the transferee to give the representations in Article X, adapted to its own circumstances.

The Company may assign this instrument on a reincorporation to change its domicile and to a successor that acquires substantially all of its business and assumes it in writing. A purported transfer or assignment in breach of this Article is void and shall not be recorded.

Article XIII. Notices in Two Jurisdictions

A notice to the Company is given in writing to its address in California and, where the notice relates to a translation or to a payment in euros, is copied to the Company's Chief Financial Officer by electronic mail. A notice to the Investor is given to its address in its own jurisdiction and, where it is time-critical, is copied by electronic mail to the address in the notice particulars.

A notice sent by courier to an address outside the United States is effective on delivery, and the party sending it shall retain the courier's proof of delivery. A notice sent by electronic mail is effective on written confirmation of receipt, and an automated acknowledgement is not written confirmation for this purpose.

Where a period runs from the giving of a notice, the period is computed by reference to Business Days at the place of receipt. The parties adopted that convention because the two parties keep different holidays, and a period computed at the place of despatch would give the recipient less time than the instrument intends.

Article XIV. Governing Law, Counterparts and Amendment

This instrument is governed by the law of the State of Delaware without regard to its conflict-of-laws rules. The parties submit to the non-exclusive jurisdiction of the state and federal courts sitting in that State, and the Investor appoints the agent named in the notice particulars to accept service of process on its behalf in the United States.

This instrument may be amended only in writing signed by both parties. A change to the currency particulars, including a change of source under Article VI, is an amendment and shall be recorded accordingly; a determination made by an accounting firm under that Article takes effect without a signed amendment and is recorded by the Company.

This instrument may be executed in counterparts, and an electronically transmitted signature has the same effect as an original. It is severable, and its particulars, including the currency particulars, the capitalisation particulars and the conversion particulars, form part of it.

Article XV. Confirmations the Investor and Its Auditors May Request

The Investor's auditors report on the Investor's holdings once in each of its financial years and require a confirmation from the Company that this instrument remains outstanding, that the euro amount stated on the signature page has not been varied, and that no amendment has been made to the currency particulars. The Company shall provide that confirmation once in each of its own fiscal years, at the Investor's request and at the Investor's expense if a second request is made.

The confirmation is a statement of the Company's records at its date. It is not a representation as to the value of the instrument, as to the likelihood of a defined event, or as to the rate at which the Purchase Amount would translate if an event occurred. The Company shall say so on the face of the confirmation, and the Investor shall not present it to its auditors as anything more.

The Company shall not provide a confirmation addressed to a person other than the Investor and its auditors, and shall not provide a confirmation that quantifies the shares the instrument would produce on a hypothetical financing. A request for such a confirmation is refused, and the Company shall record the refusal so that a later reader can see what was asked for and what was given.

Article XVI. Disruption of the Banking System and Its Effect on a Payment

If a payment under this instrument cannot be made on the day it is due because the banking system in either party's jurisdiction is closed or disrupted, the payment is made on the first day on which it can be made and neither party is in breach in the interval. The party unable to pay or to receive shall notify the other as soon as it becomes aware of the disruption.

A disruption of that kind does not change the date on which a translation is performed. The translation date is fixed by the currency particulars by reference to the defined event, and a delay in the movement of money does not move it; the Investor accordingly bears any movement in the rate between the translation and the eventual payment.

If a disruption prevents the Company from paying in euros where the Investor has asked for euros, the Company may pay in dollars into the account the Investor has notified and the payment discharges it. The Company shall notify the Investor before doing so where it is practicable, and shall provide the record of the translation it applied.

Article XVII. Enforcement and the Recognition of a Judgment

The Investor irrevocably waives any objection it may have to the jurisdiction of the courts identified in Article XIV on the ground of inconvenient forum, and waives any immunity from suit, from execution or from attachment to which it or its assets might otherwise be entitled in any jurisdiction.

Each party acknowledges that a judgment obtained in the courts identified in Article XIV may require recognition proceedings in the Investor's jurisdiction before it can be enforced there, and that the costs of those proceedings are borne by the party against which the judgment was given. Neither party undertakes that recognition will be granted.

Service of process on the Investor may be made on the agent named in the notice particulars, and service so made is effective whether or not the agent forwards the process. The Investor shall maintain an agent in the United States for so long as this instrument is outstanding and shall notify the Company of any change of agent.
