Defined Events and Administration

safe kadence separately defines an equity financing, liquidity event, dissolution event, conversion security, company capitalization, and the investor's purchase amount.

The treatment applicable at an event follows the signed SAFE's own cap, discount, family, and amendment provisions rather than a later spreadsheet recap.

Notices, assignment, governing law, counterpart execution, and amendment consent complete the operative instrument and remain effective with its economic terms.

Section 1. The Instrument, the Form Used, and the Absence of Debt

This is an agreement to issue equity in the future, made between Helioscope Robotics, Inc. and Kadence Industrial Holdings, Inc.. It creates no debt. The Company owes the Investor no money, pays no interest, and has no obligation to repay the Purchase Amount on any date or on demand. The Investor's only entitlements are those that arise on the three defined events described in Sections 3 to 5.

The instrument is on the post-money form. The distinction matters to the calculation and not merely to the label: on this form the capitalisation against which the Valuation Cap is applied is measured after the conversion of instruments of this kind rather than before it, so that the proportion the Investor obtains is fixed when this instrument is signed and is not diluted by the conversion of a later instrument of the same kind.

The Investor is a corporation that buys the Company's products and that also holds a convertible note of the Company. Neither of those relationships is affected by this instrument, and this instrument confers no right under either of them. Where this instrument refers to the Note it refers to that convertible note, which remains governed entirely by its own terms.

Section 2. The Purchase Amount and the Company's Undertaking

The Investor has paid the Company the Purchase Amount stated on the signature page, in cash and in full, and the Company has applied it to its general working capital. The Company gives no undertaking as to how the Purchase Amount is applied beyond the undertaking in Section 14 that it will not be applied in the redemption of a security or in a distribution to a stockholder.

In consideration of that payment the Company undertakes to issue the Investor the securities, or to pay the Investor the amount, to which the Investor becomes entitled on a defined event. The undertaking is not secured, is not guaranteed, and confers no priority over the Company's creditors.

The Purchase Amount is not refundable. If no defined event ever occurs, this instrument remains outstanding and the Investor receives nothing. The Investor has considered that outcome and has taken it into account in agreeing the Valuation Cap stated on the signature page.

Section 3. Equity Financing

Equity Financing means a bona fide transaction, or a series of transactions with the same or substantially the same terms, in which the Company issues preferred stock at a fixed pre-money valuation for the principal purpose of raising capital. On the closing of an Equity Financing this instrument converts automatically into shares of preferred stock and the Investor pays nothing further.

The number of shares the Investor receives is determined as the conversion particulars of this instrument provide, applying the Valuation Cap stated on the signature page to the capitalisation measured on the post-money basis Section 7 describes. The Company shall deliver the calculation to the Investor, certified by an officer, at least ten Business Days before the expected closing.

The shares the Investor receives are shares of the series sold in the financing or of a shadow series identical to it save for the per-share liquidation preference and the conversion price, as the conversion particulars provide. The Investor shall execute the governance agreements the purchasers of that series execute, and shall be bound by them from the closing.

Section 4. Liquidity Event

Liquidity Event means a change of control, a direct listing or an initial public offering. On a Liquidity Event the Investor is entitled to receive, at its election, either the cash amount the conversion particulars specify or a number of shares of common stock those particulars produce, in each case determined immediately before the event and paid or issued out of the consideration payable to stockholders.

The Investor shall give notice of its election within the period the particulars allow. If it gives no notice it is treated as having elected the cash amount, except in an initial public offering or a direct listing, where it is treated as having elected shares because no cash consideration is available.

The Investor's entitlement ranks with the entitlements of holders of the Company's other instruments of this kind and ahead of the Company's common stock. It does not rank ahead of, and is not paid before, the amounts payable in respect of the Company's indebtedness, including the Note the Investor itself holds.

Exhibit B - How this instrument and the Investor's other interests are treated at each event

Event	This instrument	The Investor's convertible note	The supply arrangements	Election available
Equity Financing	Converts into preferred stock automatically	Converts on its own terms	Unaffected	None
Change of control	Cash amount or common stock	Repaid or converted as that instrument provides	As that agreement provides	For this instrument
Initial public offering	Converts into common stock	As that instrument provides	Unaffected	None
Direct listing	Converts into common stock	As that instrument provides	Unaffected	None
Dissolution Event	Purchase Amount if funds allow	Ranks ahead as a debt	Terminates by its own terms	None
Financing below the Valuation Cap	Converts at the financing price	Converts at its own cap	Unaffected	None
No event occurs	Remains outstanding	Matures on its own date	Continues	None
Transfer of this instrument	Requires consent under Section 13	Restricted under that instrument	Not transferable with it	None

Section 5. Dissolution Event

Dissolution Event means the voluntary termination of the Company's operations, a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, or a winding up other than in connection with a Liquidity Event. On a Dissolution Event the Company shall pay the Investor the Purchase Amount out of its assets available for distribution to stockholders, before it distributes any of those assets to holders of common stock.

That payment is made after the Company's creditors have been paid or provided for. Because the Investor holds a convertible note as well as this instrument, the Investor's claim under that note is a claim of a creditor and is dealt with before the entitlement under this Section; the two are not aggregated and are not set off against one another.

If the assets available are insufficient to pay every holder of an instrument of this kind its Purchase Amount, the available assets are distributed among those holders in proportion to their Purchase Amounts and the shortfall is not recoverable.

Financing and liquidity-event definitions qualify this SAFE term.

Section 6. The Valuation Cap and the Absence of a Discount

The Valuation Cap stated on the signature page is the only economic advantage this instrument gives the Investor over a purchaser of new money in the Equity Financing. There is no discount to the price paid by those purchasers, and none was requested; the Investor's commercial interest in the relationship lies in the supply arrangements and it did not press for a second economic term here.

If the Equity Financing is completed at a valuation at or below the Cap, this instrument converts on the same basis as the purchasers of new money and the Investor obtains no advantage. If it is completed above the Cap, the Cap fixes the basis on which this instrument converts and the Investor obtains the proportion the conversion particulars produce.

The Cap is not adjusted for the passage of time, for a change in the Company's business, or for the issue of another instrument of this kind. The only circumstances in which the basis of conversion changes are those the conversion particulars state.

Section 7. What Post-Money Capitalisation Means in This Instrument

The capitalisation against which the Valuation Cap is applied is determined as the capitalisation particulars of this instrument provide. The particulars identify the classes counted, the treatment of options and other rights to acquire shares, the treatment of shares reserved under the Company's equity incentive plan, and the treatment of instruments of this kind that convert at the same closing.

The measurement is made on the post-money basis, which is what distinguishes this instrument from an instrument on the earlier form. The Investor's proportion is therefore not reduced by the conversion of another instrument of this kind at the same closing, and the dilution that conversion causes falls on the Company's existing holders rather than on the Investor.

The Company shall not apply a different measurement basis to this instrument than the particulars state, whether because another instrument of the Company uses a different basis or because a model prepared for another purpose is easier to reconcile. If the Company's records and the particulars differ, the particulars govern.

Section 8. The Side Letter Delivered With This Instrument

The Company delivered a side letter to the Investor at the same time as this instrument. The side letter grants the Investor a right to participate in the Equity Financing up to the proportion stated in it, a right to receive the Company's annual and quarterly financial statements, and a right to designate an observer to attend meetings of the Company's board.

The observer right in the side letter is the same right the Investor holds under its convertible note and is not a second right; the Investor may designate one observer in total, and the exclusions and confidentiality obligations that apply to that designation under the Note apply equally here. The information right in the side letter is likewise subject to the protocol established under the Note.

The side letter terminates when this instrument terminates, except that the participation right survives to the extent the Investor has exercised it before termination. The side letter is not assignable and does not pass with a transfer of this instrument, whether or not the Company consents to the transfer.

Exhibit C - Rights granted by the side letter and the limits on each

Right granted	Scope	Limit or exclusion	Terminates on	Assignable
Participation in the Equity Financing	Up to the stated proportion	Only if the Investor invests new money	Termination of this instrument	No

Section 9. Right of First Offer on a Commercial Licence

If the Company decides to license its control software to a third party for use in that party's own distribution operations, it shall first offer the licence to the Investor on the terms it proposes to offer to the market, and shall allow the Investor twenty Business Days to accept. The right applies to a licence for the third party's own operations and not to a licence granted as part of the sale of the Company's products.

If the Investor does not accept within that period, the Company may license the software to any person on terms no more favourable to that person than those offered to the Investor. If the Company subsequently proposes to license on more favourable terms, it shall offer those terms to the Investor first, and the period runs again.

The right is a right to be offered terms and not a right to negotiate them; the Investor may accept or decline the terms offered and may not require the Company to vary them. The right is personal to the Investor, is not exercisable by an affiliate, and does not survive a transfer of this instrument.

Section 10. Standstill and Restrictions on Acquiring Shares

The Investor shall not, without the Company's prior written consent, acquire any security of the Company otherwise than under this instrument, under its convertible note, or by the exercise of the participation right in the side letter. In particular it shall not acquire shares from a stockholder of the Company, whether by purchase, by tender or by any arrangement having the same effect.

The Investor shall not, without that consent, propose or announce a transaction that would result in its acquiring control of the Company, solicit proxies from the Company's stockholders, form a group with another holder for the purpose of influencing the Company's management, or seek the appointment of a director other than through the observer designation described in Section 8.

The restrictions in this Section continue while this instrument is outstanding and for two years after it terminates. They fall away if the Company invites the Investor to make a proposal, if a third party announces an offer for the Company, or if the Company enters into an agreement for a change of control with another person.

Section 11. Representations of the Investor

The Investor represents that it is an accredited investor (17 C.F.R. § 230.501), that it is acquiring this instrument for its own account for investment, that it has such knowledge and experience in financial and business matters as to be able to evaluate the risks of the investment, and that it can bear the loss of the whole of the Purchase Amount.

The Investor represents that it has not relied on any projection, forecast or statement of the Company's officers other than the representations recorded in this instrument, and that it has made its own investigation of the Company. It acknowledges that the Company has made no representation as to the likelihood of an Equity Financing or as to the valuation at which one might be completed.

The Company issued this instrument in reliance on those representations and on the exemption available for a limited offering to accredited investors (17 C.F.R. § 230.506(b)), and made no general solicitation. The Investor shall notify the Company if a representation in this Section ceases to be accurate while this instrument is outstanding.

Section 12. Restricted Securities and the Legend

This instrument and any security issued on its conversion are restricted securities and may not be resold except in a transaction registered under the applicable securities law or exempt from registration. The Investor acknowledges that it may be required to hold them for an indefinite period and that the Company has given it no undertaking to register them.

The Company shall apply its restrictive legend to any certificate or book-entry notation for a security issued on conversion, together with a notation of the agreements to which the Investor has adhered, and may decline to record a transfer made otherwise than in accordance with those legends.

Section 13. Assignment and the Competitor Restriction

The Investor may not assign or transfer this instrument, or any interest in it, without the Company's prior written consent. The Company may withhold consent if the proposed transferee carries on a business that competes with the Company's, determined by reference to the list the parties maintain under the Investor's convertible note, and may withhold it in any other case in its discretion.

The Company may assign this instrument in connection with a reincorporation to change its domicile, and to a successor that acquires substantially all of its business and assumes this instrument in writing. The Investor's consent is not required for such an assumption, but the Company shall give the Investor notice of it within ten Business Days.

A purported assignment in breach of this Section is void. The side letter is not assignable in any circumstances, and an assignment of this instrument that the Company consents to does not carry the side letter with it.

Operative instrument term 3

Section 14. Company Undertakings, Notices and Miscellaneous

The Company undertakes to keep reserved sufficient authorised shares to satisfy the conversion of this instrument, not to apply the Purchase Amount in the redemption of a security or in a distribution to a stockholder, and to notify the Investor of a defined event within the period the side letter requires. It gives no other undertaking as to the conduct of its business.

A notice under this instrument is given in writing to the address in the notice particulars and is effective on delivery. A notice given under the Investor's convertible note is not a notice under this instrument, and a notice under this instrument is not a notice under the supply arrangements; each instrument has its own notice provision and its own addresses.

This instrument may be amended only in writing signed by both parties, is governed by the law of the State of Delaware, may be executed in counterparts, and is severable. Where this instrument and its particulars are inconsistent, the particulars govern as to the values and calculation bases they state and this instrument governs as to all else.

Section 15. Conflicts Arising From the Investor's Two Capacities

The Investor is at the same time a purchaser of the Company's products and a holder of two of its securities. The parties recognised when this instrument was negotiated that the Investor's interest as a customer and its interest as a holder can point in different directions, and they dealt with that risk by separating the instruments rather than by attempting to reconcile the interests.

The Company shall not offer, and the Investor shall not request, a concession under the supply arrangements in exchange for a concession under this instrument, or the reverse. If either party proposes such an exchange the other shall record the proposal in writing and refer it to its own counsel before responding, and neither party's silence is to be taken as agreement.

The Investor's observer shall not receive, in the observer's capacity, information about the Company's pricing of products the Investor buys, and shall withdraw from any part of a board meeting at which that pricing is considered. The Company shall keep a note of each occasion on which the observer withdraws and shall report the notes to the board once a year.

Section 16. Records the Company Keeps for This Instrument

The Company shall record this instrument in the register it keeps of instruments of this kind, and shall record in the same register the side letter, the date on which each was signed and the fact that this instrument is on the post-money form. The register is administrative and does not vary either document.

The Company shall keep this instrument, the side letter, the particulars and the exhibits in one file, and shall keep that file separate from the file for the Investor's convertible note so that a reader asked for one instrument is not given the other. Each file shall carry an index identifying the documents held in the other.

The Company shall deliver to the Investor, on request and not more than twice in any fiscal year, a statement confirming that this instrument remains outstanding and identifying any amendment made to it. The statement is a confirmation of the Company's records and does not vary this instrument.

Section 17. Further Assurances Between These Parties

Each party shall execute the documents and take the steps the other reasonably requires to give effect to this instrument, including the joinders and adherence agreements the Company's governance documents require of a purchaser of the series into which this instrument converts, and the certifications the Company needs to establish the exemption it relied on.

Neither party is obliged, under this Section, to accept an obligation it did not agree to, to give a representation beyond those in this instrument, or to waive a right. A request under this Section that would have any of those effects may be refused without the refusing party being in breach.

Where a step under this Section requires the cooperation of a third party, the party asked shall use reasonable efforts to obtain it but does not guarantee it. The costs of a step taken under this Section are borne by the party requesting it unless the parties agree otherwise in writing.
